A KANSAS ENOCH ARDEN.

A Lawyer Supposed to Be Dead Turns Up in Colorado

Atchison, Kan., October 12.—A ripple of excitement has been created in this community by the discovery that George W. Ocker, eight years ago an attorney at this bar, and who has been thought to be dead since that time, is alive and well in Colorado, where he is enjoying a lucrative law practice under his right name. In the fall of 1880 Ocker disappeared and left no trace of his whereabouts. His young wife was crazed at the loss of her husband, but as she was penniless she was unable to institute a vigorous search for him, and in a few weeks the matter was forgotten, and she took her child and went to her friends in the country. In January following Ocker's disappearance, the mutilated and unrecognizable remains of a human being were found in a clump of trees near the Village of Monrovia, on the Central Branch of the Union Pacific Railroad, in this county. The Coroner instituted the usual investigation, and from a watch very like one Ocker had owned, it was decided that the bones were those of Geo. W. Ocker. The sorrowing wife and mother accepted the body as the dead and religiously buried it in the Monrovia Cemetery, where the mother has been frequent visitor to care for the grave and keep it covered with flowers ever since.

In due time the supposed young widow was wooed and won by a gentleman, who took her to his home in Nemaha County, where she has borne him several children. They have prospered and lived happily together, and now the intelligence comes like a blight that she was a wife when her second husband married her. The statement that Ocker is alive is made by Nicholas Meyers, a young man who was a playmate and schoolmate of Ocker's in their youth, both having been raised in this county. Meyers has been living in Colorado about ten years, and is back here on a visit. He says Ocker appeared in the town where he lives in 1883. He recognized him and talked with him, but had not heard of his trouble here. Ocker entered a law office, and two years later opened an office of his own, and now enjoys a very lucrative practice. Meyer arrived in Kansas on a visit a short time ago, and in a conversation relative to old friends was incidentally informed of Ocker's trouble and tragic death. This brought out Meyer's knowledge of Ocker's whereabouts.

Don't Miss It.

Manager Murtha scored a hit when he secured "Zozo the Magic Queen," for his popular Windsor Theatre. As presented last night at this establishment, the spectacle was worthy of the crowded house that witnessed its production.

The play combines dramatic, operatic and spectacular features, and will crowd the Windsor for the present week. Mr. Mountjoy, Walked and Miss Sweet were the stars in "Zozo," and both were well received and played their parts in a satisfactory manner. The supporting company is a good one, and the chorus of thirty well trained voices is a successful adjunct. With Manager Murtha in command and handsome George Chamberlain looking after the finances, the Windsor has started on a very prosperous season.—Y. N. Star, Sept. 6th.

Harry Allen was a wild Maine youth, who gave his family a lot of trouble and finally ran off to the West. He procured a situation in a store in Washington Territory. One day he happened to say to the storekeeper that he had got quite a pile and ought to put it in the bank, and the man replied: "Don't do that. Put your money into land." Harry took his advice, bought land and after that invested every dollar he could in the same way. When he was about twenty-one he saw a chance to make a big trade and made it. Then his father went into the same speculation, and they put up mills and engaged extensively in the lumber business. To-day Harry Allen is said to be worth $150,000.

Destroyed by Bad Boys.

No one but a builder can realize what annoyance and loss he is compelled to endure from the depredations of mischievous boys. No sooner is the foundation for a building laid than the trouble begins. When the workmen leave the place then the boys take possession. They begin by throwing stones, sticks and everything they can get hold of into the mortar beds, sometimes entirely ruining them by shoveling in all the surplus sand and refuse that are left near the mortar vat. They break and otherwise destroy the finely finished bricks that are used in the fronts of residences, break up slate, carry away laths and do all sorts of devilish things.

When the house is nearly completed it is then the mischievous boy does his worst acts of vandalism. When the plastering is fresh on the walls it is his delight to take a stick and scratch and mar the fresh plaster as much as possible. Nothing pleases these boys more than to make rude figures and scratch names and initials in deep lines on the smooth surface of the freshly plastered walls. The loss to builders in St. Louis every year by the depredations of young hoodlums is simply incalculable. It is almost impossible to find out the guilty parties, and the builder has to bear his losses and annoyances with as good grace as possible.—William Cochran in Globe-Democrat.

Different Kinds of Courage.

Illustrative of the different kinds of courage observable in different races, Lord Wolsey tells us that at the storming of Lucknow our troops found themselves in presence of a gate house, from the upper stories of which a severe fire was kept up on them. The only access to the upper stories was by some very narrow winding staircases, hardly admitting one man at a time. The English soldiers shrank for a moment from what seemed certain death. But the Sikhs rushed in, went up the staircases without a moment's hesitation, and in five minutes had thrown every rebel out of the windows. Yet the Sikhs would not have stood up man to man against English infantry. There is also the courage peculiar to certain individuals and certain races which arises from contempt for death and the belief that it only leads to a better and happier life. This was Gordon's courage. This was the courage of the Ironsides. And this is the courage of the Turks.—London Standard.
